Dear George,

When you wrote that you'd return what you got from me that you were to return you did not say when. So, if you do it next year you'd be keeping your word, huh?

I've heeded some of those things, particularly the Sciambra memo, for others.

If Oliver Stone knew, he'd thank you, I'm sure.

Whatever motives you, or you think does, you are behaving like a stinker.

As I think back over about 25 years I can't think of once asking you for anything selfish or serving any personal interest. I did take much time to be of help to you. Five of my seven books appeared after we knew each other and I do not recall ever asking you to do anything to help any one of them.

Personally and professionally yours is very bad conduct.

I think you should be ashamed!

Sincerely,

Harold Weisberg
